

Emerging Leaders Explore Electric Works at Retreat

Electric Works remains one of Fort Wayne's next and current "big things," and a group of Purdue University Fort Wayne students couldn't wait to explore it Saturday. That chance was made possible through Student Leadership's annual Emerging Leadership Retreat for sophomores and juniors. For many, it was their first time to visit this prime example of urban development.

"It's always campus to housing and housing to campus, and coming here was a little relaxing and something out of what we do the whole week," said sophomore psychology major Moksha Sree Bollapally.

It's also an opportunity to show what Fort Wayne can offer.

Students Share Their Enthusiasm for Archaeology at Campus Site

While many college students focus their attention four or five years into the future, some Purdue University Fort Wayne students love digging a little deeper to get a glimpse of what was happening a few thousand years into the past.

Part of the Department of Anthropology and Sociology, approximately 10 PFW students presented a demonstration of their skills and inquisitiveness on Saturday. Camping out on the west side base of the Ron Venderly Family Bridge, students introduced their passion to more than 75 visitors.

“It’s a pretty cool experience to talk to the public and tell them we are archaeologists,” said junior Emily Doctor. “We’re here to engage the public in archaeology and hope they get a better appreciation of it.”
