Career Development Center Encourages Early Engagement for Optimum Results

It's reassuring to know that the Career Development Center team at Purdue University Fort Wayne consists of folks who earned degrees in various disciplines.

Jackie Stancil, executive director, started as a psychology major. Tracey Hanton, associate director, began studying international business with a minor in French. Melody Monday, one of the career counselors, majored in women's studies before earning a master's degree in counseling.

That makes them well-suited to help students who are confused, frustrated, and maybe lost on what to do next. This administrative unit's overall goal is to walk beside students so they may be empowered to develop their individual brands while also honing their skills to go through a successful job search.
